Unfortunately my memory doesn't serve me that well these days to recollect All of the writers that took part in the competition, so to be fare I've left them All unnamed. For those that went to the event, I'm sure you would agree with me When I say, what a day! A multi story car park to host an event with a dj slamming down the tunes on the first floor that could be heard echoing through the city centre, no map needed to find the place trust! Through the haze a sea of kangols and fur hoods, black book robbers and buntlack was gold. That brings me to goldie, any one remember how much of that stuff he had with him, no wonder he had body guards.

From the late 80's to the mid 90's I got madly intrigued by graffiti...it pushing music to the 2nd place in my life. I started travelling The Netherlands taking photos, trying to become kind of a Dutch Henry Chalfant (LOL). I also started bombing my hometown but got busted pretty badly so I dropped that part. I kept on building my photocollection with the help of many foreign traders, in the meantime doing the occasional piece under the name of MEK.

I was born in 1973 in a small industrial town in the south-east of The Netherlands. Around 1984 I first encountered elements of the hip hop culture as kids in my school were b-boying. I didn't understand dick about what they were doing but I immediately liked it and these kids seemed the coolest guys imaginable to me. Rap music was hardly around at that time, it simply wasn't available in the shops and the radio stations hadn't pick up on it yet. I recall the breakers using music such as Madonna, Michael Jackson, Paul Hardcastle and even Murray Head's "One night in Bangkok".
