The kind of love that lasts

On the international tattoo convention circuit it often happens that readers come up to the Tattoo Life Production stand, pick up our magazines, and starting leafing through them as if they were some sort of compass to direct them along the way to their dream tattoo. Some are looking for flowers, others lettering, and then there are those hunting for something 'Japanese' or 'Old School'. Words which seem fairly meaningless in themselves, too general to have any real significance. They flick through the pages, pass remarks, meticulously sifting through as many issues as they can... and then, all of a sudden, their faces light up as they come across a photo that has nothing to do with what they were originally looking for. And they are completely blown away and astounded at their own change of heart. And it is the beginning of a new piece, something authentic, totally original, in no way dictated by fashion or outside influences. Because, who says that in order to be truly meaningful a tattoo has to be studied and researched and mulled over in your head for years? Sometimes the original idea in its unchanging iconic presence becomes jaded and loses its appeal. So maybe we are better off taking tattoo as an art, a form of expression which for any or no reason at all, sometimes inexplicably, moves us, the subject appeals, the graphics are gorgeous, we are won over by the irony we read into it. So this is the advice and the message we want to give you as we present the galleries in this new issue of Tattoo Collection. Flick through the pages without any hard and fast ideas. Let yourself get carried away by the colours on the pages. You'll see how you'll find yourself wanting something that had never even crossed your mind before. It's a bit like falling in love: you can't just go out and find the right person according to plan. You'll run into somebody by accident, a chance encounter, when you are least expecting it. Maybe even someone you would never have imagined could be right for you. Let yourself go, let your unconscious guide you and follow your gut feeling. And you'll see... it will be the kind of love that lasts!
