The existence of dreams

Whatever we read, whatever films we watch or journeys or chance encounters we make, they are all of them daily opportunities for personal growth. Memory and feelings settle like sand and eventually find a way to reemerge through some form or other of self-expression. Symbolism arose as an artistic movement towards the turn of the twentieth century to express all of this on canvas in unforgettable masterpieces with a subtle oniric ambiance emanating from the dreamstate of the artists. One art historian defined the imagery of this style as being "...contrary to visible reality or scientific exploration, capable of showing the existence of a hidden reality which it is at least possible to imagine seeing as how it is impossible to recognise its actual existence". This observation is perfectly apt to describe our need to express ourselves through tattoo which, like a vision in a dream, takes shape in our mind and strives for expression through images and symbols. At times, these are incomprehensible to others but they acquire meaning for us immediately, inexplicably and without any shadow of a doubt. They say that the last things we read or watch or have beside us as we fall asleep influence our nighttime visions and consequently our lives. Give it a try with this new issue of Tattoo Collection which we have prepared for you. Take some time over it, away from internet connections, tv and any of the other distractions that bombard us from one end of the day to the other. Take in the colours, shapes, compositions and lines and see them express your own feelings. Then close the magazine and turn off the light. A ragtag rabble of skulls, sailing ships, demons, tigers, zombies, gorgeous women, mermaids, butterflies, celebrities, eagles, mandalas, Buddhas and clocks will crowd your dreams. And on waking, you will recall something and that will be the point of departure to capture the here and now of that moment in your life in a tattoo. Searching for your colours, your tattoo artists and that extra something that only you can add to the composition of your piece. Sometimes, in order to make the right decision, all you have to do is sleep on it...
